If the Council is really serious about the development of Salt Cross Village as a Carbon Net Zero venture then it should stipulate that all buildings should have solar panels at time of building. These solar panels could support a communal battery bank to provide back up power to the village.

The council should also stipulate all residences have grey water storage either as individual tanks or communal tanks. The grey water can be used for flushing toilets and watering gardens.

Without these stipulations in place, then the council is only giving lip service to the venture.
